

To accurately assess risk, make sure you're looking at the big picture.

It's a simple fact: When risks are well-managed, they cost less.

To benchmark their performance and gauge success, companies are turning to sophisticated ways of analyzing the cost of doing business.

Risk can play a major role in a business's profitability. The total cost of risk (TCOR) includes a range of hard, variable and soft costs. Reflected in everything from premiums to administration to lost productivity.

By analyzing risk and loss, and then working to prevent, mitigate and insure against them, companies can successfully minimize cost. And maximize profitability.

What drives losses? We look at it from every angle.

To effectively manage risk and control loss, large commercial businesses need customized risk management solutions that look at cost drivers from end to end.

Our National Accounts team takes a holistic approach to managing TCOR by:¹

- Identifying and analyzing the drivers of loss.
- Determining ways to best prevent losses before they happen.
- Designing the most appropriate claims management process to mitigate the claims you do have.
- Implementing a tailored program structure to manage cost efficiency.

This strategic approach helps our customers achieve better financial outcomes today and in the future.

The total cost of risk (TCOR) includes:

- Hard costs, such as premium and cost of collateral
- Variable costs, such as retained loss and claims management costs
- Soft costs, such as loss of productivity
